The fact that Charles Frohman has engaged several English actors to fill parts next season in his various productions does not commend itself to the actors who are now collected about Broadway, between Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth streets, like a lot of fluttering files around a huckleberry pic. They are indignant, and they say very rule things. Yet Mr. Frohman is more sinned against than sinning. It is not generally known that several of the cight plays he has secured have been obtained with encumbrances. The English protors have been made sine qua non conditions of the American rights to the plays.

Annie confessed to Sister Mary Angela hast night that she was guilty of incendiarism, but the facts in the matter were kept from the police.

Capt. O'Connor, of the Church street station, however, learned of Annie's act and her confession. He said this morning, that he would not arrest the child unless a complaint was formulated. It is said that the girl is weak, minded, and that her desire to see things burn, is a development of her unfortunate mental unbalance.

Annie's parents are dead and she lived with her aunt in Brooklyn until two months ago, when she was taken to the Mission House to be educated and cared for.

Since the first day, Sister Mary Angela had noticed that the girl was peculiar, She would steal about the Mission in a mysterious manner, and occasionally evinced a desire to play with matches. Frequently she stole the match safes, Invariably the matches were taken from ber.

Yesterday forenoon one of the Sisters missed Arnie and bezan a search for her. Before she reached the dormlorys in oke was seen; issuing from there. Anile had just fired one of the beds and was watching the flames with evident delight.
